was back in time with her, she would have a good laugh about it all. "Why, I might even get them a little watch." "Yes," she said, laughing through her sadness and then shaking her head again. "You and your ideas!" The pain began to recede. It took a while, though, before she could think clearly. They would be going home soon. She would see her grandparents again. She would be able to tell them everything, and they would be proud of her. Home. She knew that home was coming, and the more she thought about it, the closer she was to their house. She had never left that house before, and she couldn't imagine leaving it now. But with the pain still lingering like a weight upon her thoughts, she felt helpless to leave it. She couldn't imagine how she would tell people she was a hero. She wasn't ready to discuss it with anyone yet. She wished she could at least tell Kathy where she was going to be. Kathy had spoken of meeting with her family, but she had never told her about the reasons. She couldn't think about her parents right now, so she thought about her sister. Kathy had said that she was staying with her father. Tess would be going there instead. Then she would have to tell Kathy. It was hard to think, because she had to keep checking to make sure that her leg wasn't asleep again. The truth was, she wasn't sure where her parents were going, and it was slowly sinking in, like the night was before her. It was not just her parents who were going to England, but everybody! Everyone she had known since birth was going. She couldn't even begin to picture what it was going to be like. How could they all leave? They said her parents were going to live with her grandparents in America, but when would that happen? They hadn't even told her that her grandparents were dead. Her leg was getting heavy again. She was slipping away. # Contents 1. Chapter 1 2. Chapter 2 3. Chapter 3 4. Chapter 4 5. Chapter 5 6. Chapter 6 7. Chapter 7 8. Chapter 8 9. Chapter 9 10. Chapter 10 11. Chapter 11 12. oem says: The past few batches have all been great! I have a few I'm planning to make a batch of for friends. Thanks for all of the stuff ya provide! You are right about all of the TJB Stoneground stuff. We all like you better than any of the regular bagel bakers. They are a great source of nutrition for us. Our "healthy" eats are mostly from the Mega Pop bones - not so healthy - but probably the best snack we have right now. I've been wondering if you could get some udon into bagels - or add sunflower seeds, or make some sort of "veggie" version, since they are the most nutritious of our bagels for me. We're really excited to see how good they come out. A LOT of people seem to think they are good, but since we're not so used to all these different styles, we're hoping they turn out great. That rise is good news because the measure can accurately identify momentum stocks that are attractive for investors who want to avoid the market's 30 per cent correction since March. "We believe that the S&P 500 is almost through the period of its correction, and only a strong rally following the recovery will push the S&P 500 to new highs," said Lin Zhu, professor of finance at the China University of Political Science & Law in Beijing. Still, Zhu does not expect the broader S&P 500 to see a 10 per cent drop like the one in the past month, but a decline of 1 to 3 per cent is also possible, "which may warrant a pullback in risky assets," Zhu told CNBC's "Street Signs" on Monday. Among undervalued markets, the MSCI World Undervalued Index has gained 4.8 per cent this month, according to a Bloomberg index. On Monday, shares of Terex, a manufacturer of heavy-duty equipment that does business in China, fell more than 8 per cent after it reported a Q2 loss of $85 million. The company blamed its performance
