Term	Definition
	Some developments may ask for an exemption from paying contributions (such as affordable housing being provided by a not-for-profit community housing provider). Any 'exemption' granted to a development is funded by the community (through council rates) as the rules of 'nexus' and 'apportionment' mean that it should not be passed on to other developers to pick up the cost. Preparation and on-going management and review of contribution plans is resource intensive. It is common to have detailed technical studies to support these plans.
Funds held in trust	The money collected through development contribution levies must be held in trust and be applied for the public purpose that it was collected for. There are rules for how funds can be 'pooled' and progressively applied to infrastructure priorities.
Timing of payment	Contributions are usually required to be paid prior to the release of a Construction Certificate, which is before construction begins. For subdivision of land, the payment is usually required prior to the release of the Subdivision Certificate, which is before the subdivided lots can be legally registered.
Indexation	Cost estimates for infrastructure, and subsequently the contribution rates to be paid, are prepared at a point in time. To help them keep up with price rises, they are "indexed". The Act requires that the index is one that is readily accessible, such as the Consumer Price Index. The Australian Bureau of Statistics publishes a range of indices. Sometimes a customised index may be produced, such as a Land Value Index, to manage changes in price that may be more specific to a location.
